The constitution that was adopted on July . Retrieved . The constitution was drafted by Zulfikar Ali Bhutto and approved by the . It came into effect after a referendum held on 7 . On 9 September 1973, a one-day state of emergency was declared in the country to uphold the constitution. It was lifted in 1973 after Bhutto's ouster in . "This is the most democratic constitution that has ever been put in place in Pakistan. Constitutional rules are being applied in a permissive manner and, as a result, a whole new generation of lawyers has begun to arise. Students of Pakistan are studying the Constitution and are deeply influenced by it, for it embodies the spirit of the people and their aspirations," stated the then Governor of Punjab, Bashir Ahmad. The first part of the constitution includes the preamble, the body of the constitution and an appendix. The preamble consists of three chapters which elaborate the theoretical framework of the entire constitution and the values that the state seeks to uphold. The latter two chapters detail the structure and the content of the constitution, respectively. The state emphasizes that its authority is derived from , and under the three treaties that the .
